

Sleek and CHIC

RYE

THE GOAL: "Architecturally, we needed to add light and cohesion. The kitchen and family room were adjacent but completely separated, and the floor of the family room was sunken. The space felt oppressive. To make it airy and family-friendly, we needed to remove all visual and physical barriers. To do that, we raised the floor to a single level and joined the kitchen and family rooms. We broke down the exterior wall and replaced it with a continual panel of glass. Cheek walls bookend the handleless cabinets to lend definition. We looked to consider the view of the kitchen from every angle; there is no front or back to the space. We chose this color palette to further enhance and visually expand the abundance of natural light."
